

Documentarian James Reed on Witnessing Chimpanzee Patrols and Attacks

<https://silosolo.com/869766>

Summary

The transcript discusses concerns about being attacked by chimpanzees while filming and the reassurance provided by scientists to keep a respectful distance. It highlights the difference in the relationship between chimpanzees in the wild and those in captivity or kept as pets. Witnessing chimp-on-chimp violence is described as hard to watch and there is a sense of sadness to it. It is mentioned that there is an instance of chimps killing another chimp. The transcript also mentions that even the scientists, who detach themselves emotionally, can feel sadness when witnessing violence against chimps they have known and followed for a long time.

Silo sample questions

- Is there a concern of being attacked by chimpanzees while filming?
- Are chimpanzees violent towards humans?
- What is the experience of witnessing chimp-on-chimp violence?
- Are there instances of chimps killing each other?
- Do the scientists get emotionally affected by the violence witnessed?

Topics

chimpanzee behavior

filming dangers chimpanzee violence

relationship with humans

emotional impact

Key Takeaways

- There is concern but the scientists reassured them and advised to keep a respectful distance.
- Chimpanzees in the wild have a different relationship with humans compared to those in captivity or kept as pets.
- It is hard to watch and there is a sadness to it.
- Yes, there is an instance of chimps killing another chimp.
- Even the scientists, who detach themselves emotionally, can feel sadness when witnessing violence against chimps they have known and followed for a long time.

Click here for the full transcript

Click here for the source